REPORT, &c.

In our last Report, we had to commemorate a new era in the formation of the Committee of Management under which the affairs of the Dispensary are now conducted, and to express our gratification at the great progress then made in the organization and efficiency of the Institution. This, the seventh year of its existence, has been even more eventful; and from circumstances, not certainly unanticipated, but perhaps under-estimated by many of us, the Edinburgh Homœopathic Dispensary has attained a position of public influence and estimation to which the most sanguine of its supporters would a few years ago have deemed it rash to look forward. It is extremely satisfactory that this should not have been the result of any fortuitous event, but the foretold consequence of public experience of the efficiency of the Homœopathic system of treatment when applied to that disease which has scourged so many of the cities of Europe, and brought death into so many of our own families. While it was yet in the distance, but believed to be certainly approaching, your Committee had expressed their anxious wish "to have the public support in applying that system of cure to a disease, in which, by very ample and accurate statistics obtained in other countries, it has shewn an amount of success so far exceeding that of any other system;" and when it was announced to be among us, steps were instantly taken, with the cordial and zealous co-operation of your Medical Officers, to bring what relief could be brought to the sufferers. It is impossible to doubt that much good has followed these efforts; and it is matter of congratulation and thankfulness to all who have taken any part in them, whether by the contribution of labour or of money, that the success has been all that was to be hoped for.

Although a separate Report* on this subject has already appeared, it seemed to your Committee to deserve the very first notice in the ordinary Annual Report; but the details relating to it are reserved for subsequent statement.

The next matter to be referred to, is also one of congratulation—the greatly improved accommodation afforded by the new premises. The house in Stockbridge, formerly occupied as a Dispensary, having been found inconvenient, your Committee obtained at Whitsunday last, on lease for a number of years, and at a moderate rent, most commodious rooms, being the whole ground-floor of a house on the south side of James' Square. A more central position could not have been found; and in other respects the premises are extremely suitable. Their proximity to Leith is a great convenience to the numerous Patients who still come from that quarter; no separate Dispensary having been yet established for their use.

It will be seen from the appended Table, that during the last year, from December 1847 to November 1848, both inclusive, no fewer than 1831 Patients, besides those entered in the Cholera books, or in all above 2000 Patients, have been treated at the Dispensary; and when it is considered that removal to a new locality must for some time, and until the Institution become well known in the neighbourhood, tend to prevent a full attendance, the result will appear to have entirely justified the anticipations of your Committee as to the fitness of the locality now occupied. We have also the pleasure of stating that during the past year several students of Medicine have been attending the Dispensary; and it is to be hoped that their numbers in future may be still greater, as the wants of the community are in this respect far from being adequately supplied. At the same time, we have to regret the loss of Dr. Atkin, who after having opened at Portobello a Dispensary, where in less than six months above 350 Patients had been treated, was induced to become House Physician during the prevalence of Cholera, and after the state of Dr. Cockburn's health had obliged him to resign. Dr. Atkin has accepted an invitation to establish himself in one of the most important commercial towns in England, where he is now settled with every prospect of a large practice. During the three months of his residence at the Dispensary, he discharged the very onerous duties which fell on him to the entire satisfaction of your Committee, who desire to express their sense of the great value of his services, and their cordial wishes for his future success. It may be here mentioned that your Committee thought it right to offer a gratuity each month to the House Physicians; but so small as to be viewed rather as an acknowledgment of the great value of the services thus obtained, than as at all an adequate remuneration for them. One other loss has to be recorded in the resignation of our excellent Treasurer, Mr. Simpson, whose avocations abroad make it impossible for him to continue the discharge of these duties, which will in the meantime devolve on the Secretary.

With reference to the Cholera, its history and Homœopathic treatment in Edinburgh, we again refer to the Report on that subject, embracing the cases occurring between the 8th and 27th October last, already published and very largely circulated; above a thousand copies having been sold in England, Scotland, and Ireland. But as that Report relates only to the cases treated during the first fortnight after the invasion of Cholera, it will be necessary to give now some further particulars in regard to its course, and the means which were used to arrest it, as well as to state the numerical result of the whole cases which came under the charge of the Physicians to the Dispensary. This will be done as briefly as possible; and those who may wish for additional information on the subject, are referred to the British Journal of Homœopathy, for January and April 1849.

The general arrangements which were made on the first incursion of Cholera, continued in operation at the Dispensary during the whole of its course, and the most effectual means were used to give public notice that Medical assistance was to be obtained there at all hours, by the posting of hand-bills, and by circulars addressed to those frequenting the dwellings of the poor. That these measures were much needed, and quite successful, appears in the very large proportion treated by the Physicians of the Dispensary, being more than one-fourth of the whole cases of Cholera reported to the General Board of Health as having occurred in Edinburgh and Leith.

The first case occurred on the 8th October, the last on the 11th February; the disease having continued in Edinburgh rather more than four months. It reached its maximum about the beginning of December—the greatest number of new cases in any one week having occurred during the week ending December 3d, and being thirty-four; after which time the number of cases decreased rapidly, and during the last week of January only three new cases were reported. Not more than one or two stray caseso ccurred afterwards. The following Table shows the progress of the disease :—

Thus the total number of cases, after deducting all doubtful ones, is 236; of these 179 recovered, and 57 died. This gives a mortality of 24.15 per cent.,—a very serious mortality certainly; and very lamentable it is that nearly one-fourth of all who took Cholera should have died; the virulence of the disease appearing also in this, that the average duration of the fatal cases was no more than fifty-eight hours. Still there is much comfort in the thought that under the treatment employed by the Medical Officers of the Dispensary, the mortality was so much less than the average mortality in Edinburgh during the same period, and, except in the matter of Medical treatment, under similar circumstances; and in the assurance thence arising that many human lives have been saved, and thus the most anxious efforts have been amply recompensed.

We have received from the General Board of Health the following return of the total number of cases of Cholera in Edinburgh and Leith, (which appear to be classed together,) with the result—which gives a mortality of rather more than 56 per cent.; or if we deduct from the total number of cases reported, those which were reported from our Dispensary, with the corresponding results, there will remain 640; of which 435 died, and 65 recovered: which gives a mortality of within a small fraction of 68 per cent. of the cases treated otherwise than Homœopathically; while as above stated, the mortality among those treated Homœopathically was only 24.15 per cent.

Attacks.	Deaths.	Recoveries.

It was stated in the former Report on this subject, that in some instances the patients, when visited by the Physicians of the Dispensary, were found in so great destitution, (being without food, fuel, or clothing,) that it was necessary to send them immediately to the Infirmary; and an attempt has been made to diminish the value of the differential statistics just given, by suggesting that the worst cases were sent to the Infirmary, and thus the proportion of deaths apparently lessened. To correct this error, it is only necessary for us to repeat emphatically what has been already asserted, that in no cases except those above referred to, and one or two others, when it was done by the express desire of the patients, were any sent to the Infirmary; and that it became less necessary to use that extreme measure after food and blankets had been provided for the patients.

That the labour of the Physicians was great, will be easily understood, when it is considered that upon six of them (at the most, and there were seldom so many) devolved the whole duty of giving constant attendance at the Dispensary, which continued to be open at all hours, day and night; and of visiting during one week forty-five patients, each of them perhaps three or four times a-day; and these not gathered into an Hospital, nor even confined to one district, but scattered over the city and its suburbs, from Leith Walk to Bruntsfield Links, and residing very often in the remotest and most inaccessible localities. Add to this labour the anxiety and mental suffering, without which no right-hearted man can witness the cruel ravages, especially among the poor, of a disease in all its features so appalling, and before which, at least when fully developed, the most skilful treatment becomes comparatively powerless, and there will appear large acknowledgments due to those who willingly undertook and manfully discharged these painful duties.

The Committee take this opportunity of recording their high sense of the value and desert of these services; and would, at the same time, tender cordial thanks to those who, by providing food and clothing for the most destitute of the patients, not only relieved their sufferings and promoted their recovery, but in so great measure lessened the anxieties of their Medical attendants, who have frequently and warmly expressed their thanks for this kindness. There remains as the fruit of these labours, not only the good which has been already experienced in the cure of the sick, but a large provision for future use in the valuable details of all the cases, which have been carefully collected and preserved in the Cholera books of the Dispensary. From these books there were accurate Schedules prepared and communicated (after copies had been taken for preservation) to the General Board of Health in London, by the House Physician, who received an acknowledgment in the following terms:—

The General Board of Health.

GWYDYR HOUSE, WHITEHALL,
24*th February* 1849.

SIR,—I am directed by the General Board of Health to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 22d instant, with the reports of cases of Cholera forwarded therewith; and I am to convey the thanks of the Board to the Physicians of the Edinburgh Homœopathic Dispensary, for the valuable information contained in those Reports.—I am, Sir, your most obedient Servant,

ALEX. BAIN, Asst. Secretary.

To G. ATKIN, Esq., M.D.,
Homœopathic Dispensary, 5, James' Square, Edinburgh.

It is to be mentioned that a number of the articles of clothing which have been kindly bestowed for the use of the sick, are still undisposed of; and that there remains a considerable sum of money, collected for the purchase of food, which being no longer required for that purpose, will now be applied to the general expenses of the Dispensary.

After what has been related, it will hardly be necessary to add, that the Dispensary has the strongest claims for much larger than usual Contributions, to meet the greatly increased expenses of the past year; but it may be stated, that although these claims have been already very liberally acknowledged by a few of our most zealous friends, the funds remaining are hardly sufficient to pay the debts already due, exclusive of that due to the Medical Officers, towards the discharge of which the Committee are most anxious to make an instant payment; and that thus nothing remains for future expenses.

In these circumstances, it is confidently expected that the Contributions for the present year will be unusually liberal.

The Dispensary is open at No. 5, James' Square, on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, from Two to Four o'clock.
